

You, Me, Them and the Landscape

Collaborating for the benefit for all

I am well in every sense, leading a meaningful life, with caring family and community relationships, within a society that understands, values and fairly rewards and supports my work, and within a landscape that is ecologically 'healthy' and sustainable.

I suspect that all of us would love this to be completely true; and that we, in a variety of ways, are having to deal with many of the aspects of this 'vision' that are sadly not true.

The commonest ways in which we do this is through denial, postponement, blame, complaining, emergency measures, distractive and compensatory activities, problem-solving interventions...

Deep down, however, we all know (or at least suspect) that what is needed is fundamental change that is both broader (local to global) and deeper (personal to political) – change that involves our species, nation, communities of practice, and our personal beliefs, priorities, competencies and ways of relating and acting.

Dinner 26th October 2011
6.00pm for 7.00pm
Ladysmith Hall
Tumbarumba Road, Ladysmith

Stuart B. Hill
Adjunct Professor of Social Ecology
University of Western Sydney

Hosted by the Kyeamba Valley Landcare Group and Riverina Bluebell as part of the 14th Murrumbidgee Landcare Annual Forum

Bookings office@murrumbidgeelandcare.asn.au <http://www.murrumbidgeelandcare.asn.au/forum2011>